

The NAB needs to take a closer look at how bad regular broadcast radio has become instead of trying to stop the competition from competing directly. In Cincinnati, two owners have almost all the larger radio stations in town. What do these stations do? They play about 15 minutes of commercials, 25 minutes of music and 20 minutes of DJ babble that includes a lot of commercial "drop-ins". I rarely get weather and traffic unless I memorize when each station does this "service." The attempt by the NAB to protect its stations is pitiful. Competition always creates a better mousetrap. Besides, there are so many other places to get local information, traffic and weather, that the NAB is fooling itself into thinking that everyone listens to broadcast radio for this information. Let XM expand and grow so more people can find out how great this entertainment and information service is.
